Today's school districts and local communities are dealing with increasing mental health and social-emotional challenges among their children. Suicide rates, severe depression, feelings of hopelessness and other mental illness factors are on the rise, leaving education and community leaders wondering what more they can be doing to help.

Mental health and social-emotional wellness are becoming widely recognized as key influencers on student success and health — not just in the classroom but also in life. Educators and community agencies are poised to help ensure students are equipped to successfully navigate the challenges they may face, but they need the right tools and training themselves to recognize issues and offer appropriate guidance and support.

That's why nearly 20 education groups, mental health organizations and community agencies have partnered to host the Mental Health and Social-Emotional Learning Summit. This free event is designed to help school board members, administrators, educators, counselors, psychologists, support staff, mental health professionals, community leaders and parent organizations find creative and effective solutions that can lead to more productive, successful and fulfilled students.

Districts are encouraged to bring a team so staff can attend multiple breakout sessions. The 24 sessions will focus on the specifics of different approaches and programs, keynote speakers will offer insights and inspiration and Resource Fair participants will provide access to services that will enable schools to find robust and long-lasting solutions to their challenges.

The organizations involved believe that the mental and social-emotional wellness of students is such a vital concern that they don’t want any financial barriers to prevent you and your team from attending. That’s why this event is free. We encourage you to take a day away from your district to attend this important event. The information you will gain will help your students, schools and communities.
Keynote speakers

Opening General Session
In their voices — Dr. Kathy McFarland
Often, adults tell students what they need. Today, students will use their voices to describe how we can support them in the areas of mental health and social-emotional learning. Join Dr. Kathy McFarland, a former educator and principal and current deputy chief executive of OSBA, to hear what students are asking of you to promote better student success and health in your school district and community.

Closing General Session
The power of vision — Dr. Thomas G. Maridada II
A former educator and superintendent, Maridada previously served as president of BRIGHT New Leaders for Ohio Schools, a nonprofit, statewide public-private partnership funded by the Ohio General Assembly. He is a world-class educator who, over the course of a 25-year career, has raised academic achievement and created a brighter future for thousands of young people. Prior to joining BRIGHT, Maridada served as national director of education policy, practice and strategic initiatives for the Children’s Defense Fund in Washington, D.C. Currently, he is the Jim and Susan Swartz Fellow in Christian Studies at the Harvard Divinity School at Harvard University.

The recently passed biennial budget includes $675 million in new funding for student wellness and success programs that will be distributed to districts across the state.

The program is designed to help districts and schools support students’ academic achievement through mental health counseling, wraparound services, mentoring and after-school and other programs.

Join us for this special panel where experts from OSBA and ODE will provide insight into this new funding and answer your questions.

Sessions and speakers are subject to change. Information current as of Jan. 14, 2020. Please refer to the summit website, www.ohioschoolboards.org/mental-health-summit, for the most up-to-date information.
